Vandals shoot windows out of 27 local stores

At least 27 businesses in Provo and Orem had windows to replace after several possibly related vandalism incidents Tuesday night.

Calls to the Provo Police Department and the Orem Department of Public Safety began around 11:30 p.m. Tuesday and continued Wednesday morning as more businesses reported destroyed windows and other vandalism.

Capt. Keith Teuscher, head of criminal investigations in Provo, approximated combined damages in Provo and Orem at more than $50,000. Teuscher said the police are still investigating the incidents and possible motives.

"There's a tremendous amount of property damage. We've just got to analyze what has happened. Our best hope is that someone in the public will step forward with information," Teuscher said.

Sgt. Mark Troxel of the Provo Police Department said officers are unsure of what was used to shoot out the windows.

"It is possibly wrist rockets or BB guns," Troxel said. Other possibilities are air guns, paintball guns or frozen paintballs. In addition to the broken windows, several businesses had damage to merchandise inside the businesses.

Office Essentials, at 120 N. University Ave., had three pieces of office furniture gouged by broken glass flying from a shattered window.

"It was a low sleep night," said Office Essentials manager Steve White, who was called at midnight by police reporting the broken window. "We have four to five thousand dollars in damage, but Ken Garff was who really got hurt."

Ken Garff Motors Porsche Audi Volkswagen Sales, at 410 S. University Ave., had at least $20,000 in damage.

Several windows were broken, with both paint balls and bullet holes found. Glass and other items scratched the paint on at least four showroom cars.

Joe Keddington of Provo Craft calculated damage at more than $500 from four broken windows.

The Orem Department of Public Safety reported damage to 21 businesses covering a 24-block area along State Street. Damages in Orem are estimated at $10,000.

Police first responded to Prestige Wireless at 148 S. State St., where one front windowpane was broken. In the same business complex, police found two other businesses with window damage.

A heavy plate, dark-tinted window was smashed at Hansen Chiropractic. Hansen estimates the replacement cost at $200-$300. Windows were also shattered at Dr. Christopher's Herb Shop.

"We've had it broken before, so we estimate it will be about $600," said Jason Humphrey of the herb shop. More damages were found as the police continued answering other calls along State Street.

Jones Paint and Glass reported at least 12 calls for estimates on broken windows, with one business having 12 panes of glass broken.

Two motor vehicles parked along University Avenue also had broken windows and are possibly related to the other incidents.

Residents speak out on SCAMP

By Ryanne Higley

Residents of south Provo voiced their opinions Wednesday about the South Campus Area Master Plan in the first meeting open to the public.

"Another meaning for SCAMP is Stupid Careless And Mindless Planning," said Tom Dean, a Provo home owner and a BYU alumnus.

SCAMP is a reconstruction plan that covers of the area south of campus from 900 East to University Avenue and from BYU campus to 500 North. The plan would create a university village that will only allow student housing only while the area south of 500 North would be designated for owner occupancy.

Wednesday night's meeting at the Joaquin Elementary School was the first of two SCAMP workshops this week. The meeting focused on a visual preference survey and a public discussion of the plan.

John Fregonese, the SCAMP consultant, presented 100 slides of different building designs that could be used to make up the university village. Those at the meeting rated each slide on a scale of 0 to 10 — 10 being the best and 0 being the worst. Fergonese said after the workshop that the committee will use the data to select the 10 most liked and 10 most disliked designs.

SCAMP "is a wonderful idea," Fergonese said.

He said the SCAMP committee's goals are sixfold: create a workable student housing district; provide neighborhood retail services; develop useable open space; reduce student auto trips to campus; develop capacity for housing an additional 4,000 to 5,000 students; and protect the Joaquin neighborhood from traffic.

Kevin Callahan, the assistant director of Community Development, said that the student body of BYU and UVSC living off campus is too large for the living density available to them now. Because of zoning and land regulations, the cost of parking is expensive, making it hard to develop affordable housing.

Callahan said that the proposed SCAMP plans will help rectify these problems.

"It is better to design something with the students in mind that will help bring them closer to campus," Callahan said.

"The government has to do for people what people can't do for themselves," said Melanie McCoard, a Provo citizen activist who ran for city council last fall.

McCoard said that SCAMP is a good remedial step for the area south of campus and that the neighborhoods should be protected as long as they are viable. She said south campus is not a viable neighborhood, but those that are should be protected.

"SCAMP is good place to start, but it cannot be limited to just that," McCoard said.

Tom Dean does not agree with the SCAMP plan at all. He said that BYU has adequate housing and adding 6,000 more students, UVSC included, is ludicrous.

Dean said the basic problems south of campus are parking and traffic.

"It's raping the public," Dean said.

Property owners and residents of the proposed SCAMP zone discuss options for future BYU housing Wednesday night at the first of two community workshops at Joaquin Elementary School in Provo.

Fight Club venue may lose permit

By Nikki Purdy

A new Pleasant Grove business may lose its permit before it opens after hosting the Fight Club on April 24.

The Proving Grounds indoor skateboard and inline skating park may not be allowed to open if the Planning Commission decides it violated its conditional permit. The commission will meet May 11 to rule on the violation.

Mark Sargeant, zoning administrator, said the permit attaches conditions for it to remain valid, including a requirement to pave an area surrounding the warehouse for at least 50 parking spaces.

The paving had not been completed when the Fight Club met there, drawing more than 400 spectators and causing the commission to question whether 50 spaces would be sufficient, Sargeant said.

Besides the parking, using the space for a fight exceeded the bounds of the permit, Sargeant said.

Sonny Fleming, one of the owners of the park, said the magnitude of the Fight Club event was more than the owners expected.

Fleming said he and his partners have spent more than $150,000 to build the park for kids to skateboard.

The commission can either revoke or modify the permit for failure to follow the conditions.

"Whether they lose it all together, I don't know," Sargeant said. "My suspicion is they will at least communicate in the most severe terms not to do it again."

Government to give funds to kill bugs

SALT LAKE CITY — At least $1 million from the Bureau of Land Management will go to survey and kill grasshoppers and Mormon crickets in Utah, Rep. Jim Hansen has announced.

The pests infested an estimated 1.5 million acres in Utah last year, causing as much as $22.5 million in damages in Box Elder and Tooele counties alone.

Agricultural officials are expecting this year's invasion to be worse.

"Grasshoppers and crickets also caused considerable damage to suburban residential areas," Hansen said Tuesday in a news release. "Peoples' lawns, shrubs and trees were picked bare. In some cases the grasshoppers ate the stucco off of the homes and I even had a woman call and tell me that the screens on her windows and doors were being eaten off by these critters."

Air Jordan jumps onto IMAX screens

NEW YORK — The inspiration struck Don Kempf while he was sitting in the back row of a giant-screen movie about Niagara Falls.

He decided he would use the massive IMAX screen for something other than a nature film. He wanted the world to have an eight-story movie about one of his heroes: Michael Jordan.

Three years later, the results of that epiphany arrive in IMAX theaters around the country this weekend — an extremely close-up celebration of the world's most famous athlete — called "Michael Jordan to the Max."

"I don't think there's any other way that Michael Jordan should be shown," said Kempf, 33. "Few people have had the opportunity to see Michael Jordan that close."

IMAX theaters' giant screens fill viewers' peripheral vision, immersing them in a setting.

In the Jordan movie, the effect puts the audience on the basketball court with 20,000 fans clamoring all around. Slow-motion footage gives the viewers a sense of Jordan's artistry and time to examine rivulets of sweat on his body and the pained expressions on his opponents' faces.

Extra tickets available for 2000 Games

With less than 140 days to the Summer 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, an extra supply of tickets will go on sale May 7.

According to www.olympics.com, the official Web site of the Sydney 2000 Olympic Games, ticket contingencies were placed until the Sydney Organizing Committee was confident in the available seating at each sports venue.

Several venue changes have affected ticket quotas. Now over 2.4 million additional tickets to all sports events can be purchased by Visa, money order, personal or bank check.

To purchase tickets for the Summer 2000 Olympic Games, contact the United States Olympic Committee for more information.

Who wants to dress like a millionaire?

NEW YORK — You don't have to be a millionaire to dress like Regis Philbin.

The host of ABC's popular "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" has signed a deal granting Phillips-Van Heusen Corp. the right to design shirts and ties bearing his name.

The line will feature microfiber shirts and silk ties that retail for $40 and $50.

"Especially in the summer there will be a wide assortment of colors — the more colors the better," Philbin said.

Philbin will get a guaranteed fee against which future royalties will be offset, the Wall Street Journal reported. Van Heusen is expecting to sell $50 million worth of the clothes in the first year, following the line's launch next month.

Libyans plea innocent in plane bombing

Associated Press

CAMP ZEIST, Netherlands — Two suspected Libyan intelligence agents pleaded innocent at the opening of their trial Wednesday for blowing up Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988, claiming Palestinian terrorists were responsible.

The plea came minutes after Scottish High Court judge, Lord Ranald Sutherland, opened the proceedings against defendants Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah, who surrendered for trial last year following nearly a decade of sanctions against Libya.

The defense statement named Mohammed Abu Talb, a Palestinian serving a life sentence in Sweden for earlier bombings in Denmark and the Netherlands, as one of 10 other alleged conspirators. The defense also alleged the Syrian-based group the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, led by Ahmed Jibril, and the Palestinian Popular Struggle Front were behind the Lockerbie bombing.

If the defense successfully implicates other suspects, it could raise enough doubt about the Libyans' involvement to win an acquittal.

Prosecutors allege that the defendants planted a suitcase rigged with a plastic explosive onto a flight that eventually connected with flight 103 at Heathrow airport.

All 259 passengers and crew members – including 189 Americans heading home – were killed along with 11 residents of Lockerbie after the New York-bound jumbo jet took off from London's Heathrow airport at 6:25 p.m. on Dec. 21, 1988.

The proceedings follow the largest international murder investigation on record, with officials interviewing 15,000 witnesses in more than 20 countries and sifting through 180,000 pieces of evidence.

Road barriers may be perman

Temporary concrete barriers may take up permanent residence along medians in Provo Canyon.

The barriers were installed over the past two years in an effort to reduce the number of accidents caused by vehicles crossing through the median, said Dan Nelson, Utah Department of Transportation project manager.

"The barriers are very effective in redirecting traffic and in practically eliminating the chance of a serious head-on crash," Nelson said.

Traffic engineers with the Utah Department of Transportation identified specific locations where a number of serious accidents had occurred.

UDOT placed concrete barriers at three locations to research their effectiveness at increasing safety, Nelson said.

A provision in UDOT's Record of Decision, a document outlining acceptable measures in decisions that impact the environment, prohibits the use of concrete barriers in the canyon.

Y takes first in mini-baja

BYU's team of mechanical engineers earned first and third place at a competition last weekend. The competition, at Kansas State University, judged single-driver, off-road vehicles.

BYU students took first and third place honors last week at a competition for mini-baja vehicles.

The Manhattan Madness 2000: Mini Baja West competition at Kansas State University was sponsored by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

The event was made up of several competitions to test each team's mini-baja, which are single-driver, off-road vehicles.

"We came home with more plaques than any other school from any previous competition," said Robert H. Todd, professor and coach of the teams.

Eighty-six teams from 56 schools participated in the event, representing 25 states and three countries.

Todd said he does not know of a college ever having two winning teams.

"This has got to be one of the most, if not the most prestigious competition engineering students can enter in the nation with respect to automotive vehicle engineering design and performance," Todd said.

Categories of competition included design, acceleration, sales presentation, cost, hill climbing, maneuvering, endurance and five overall winners.

BYU's junior team of mechanical engineers won first place overall, as well as second place in the acceleration event.

The team of senior students won the Cessna award, third overall and second place awards for endurance and sales presentation.

The Cessna award, presented to the seniors' team, was based on criteria of creativity, enthusiasm, spirit, selflessness and attitude.

"A good attitude is something people remember, and this team gives a very favorable impression of Brigham Young," said Jennifer Holley of the Cessna Aircraft Company, in a letter of congratulations.

Junior team captain Mike Whiting said that winning first prize was an unexpected honor.

"It was unbelievable because we went in to have a good time as a precursor to our senior year, but it all worked out for us," Whiting said.

Jisang Sun, a junior from Seoul, Korea, said that the key to winning first place was consistency.

"We got second place in one event, but for the seven events we were consistently in the top five," he said.

The team of seniors included Phillip Toone, Aaron Fox, Yuri Hovanski, Joe Memmott, Trever Coppeiters, Ben Morgan, Brian Llewellyn, Brett Withers and Steven Tuttle.

Members of the junior team were Rob Cloward, Jisang Sun, Mike Liechty, Michael Whiting, Jason Elliott and Brandon Glissmeyer.

"In the end it didn't make any difference who was on which team," Todd said. "It was all for one and one for all, like the Three Musketeers."

The senior team built its car as part of the Senior Capstone Project. It was built from the ground up with the exception of the engine, provided by Briggs and Stratton.

Y purchasing hosts vendors and suppliers

By Angelique Thomas

Around 240 vendors and suppliers were on campus Wednesday as part of the first BYU Vendor/Supplier Appreciation Day.

Heather Densley, a BYU purchasing clerk, said some of the top representatives from suppliers such as Dell Computers, Minute Maid, Xerox and Cisco Systems, attended the event.

"During a purchasing department meeting we were challenged to go a step beyond what we are currently doing," said Vern O'Brien, manager of the Central Receiving Department.

The day was created to show BYU's appreciation for the vendors' support, O'Brien said.

"We hoped this day would improve our relationships with the vendors by showing them where their products are used so they could see the important part they play in the university," said Kim Ponczoch, data entry specialists in the Purchasing Department.

Mark Robbins, a buyer in the purchasing department and chair of the organizing committee, said the day's objectives were to show appreciation and to help the vendors and suppliers understand BYU and what it is trying to accomplish. BYU also wanted to answer questions and get feedback.

Tours were conducted for the vendors to meet the departments they work with and showcase what is going on in those areas, Robbins said.

O'Brien said the tours helped vendors meet the people they are dealing with, see the facilities and view the end results. He said they wanted the vendors to see their support is vital for BYU.

President Merrill J. Bateman, the morning's keynote speaker, gave an overview of BYU and how important the vendors and suppliers' services are to the university, said Harold Redd director of Support Services.

In the afternoon there was an open house with the Purchasing, Accounts Payable and Receiving departments. This allowed the vendors to talk about any problems or concerns and to discuss ways of doing business, O'Brien said.

Russell Gramse, from General Communications, which supplies BYU with audiovisual equipment, said he was impressed with the independent study program that helps to extend the campus throughout the world.

Paul Smith from Cisco Systems has worked for years with BYU in computer networking. He was interested in President Bateman's statement about extending BYU's campus through technology. Cisco Systems is helping BYU accomplish its goal through computer networking, Smith said.

Tom Sweet represented Dell Computers at the event. Sweet said it was an educational experience to see how technology was applied on campus. He said he was impressed with BYU's ability to integrate its vision and mission with the spiritual side of students' growth.

Y dance team lights up the RB

The BYU Young DanceMakers will perform "Dancing Backwards!" on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in the Dance Studio Theatre in 166 RB.

Christine Ollerton, co-director of The Young DanceMakers, said the creative dance program has existed as a part of BYU since 1967.

The Young DanceMakers is comprised of children ages 3 to 18 from all cities in Utah County, she said.

Stacia Rudolph, the program coordinator, said the performance this weekend will include a variety of pieces. Some of them will be light and airy, while others will be humorous with wacky costumes and crazy movements.

Only the most advanced dancers from the program will perform in this weekend's performances, Ollerton said.

"The children are beautifully trained not only in technique, but in the creative approach," she said.

Rudolph said the purpose of the children's creative program is to build creativity and confidence.

"The children themselves compose the movements used in the dance pieces," Ollerton said.

Tickets are available in the HFAC ticket offices. Prices run from $6 for the general public and adults and $5 for children, senior citizens, and BYU students, faculty and staff.

YU softball team will rth Saturday to play a ader against Utah in the es of the season.

es are currently ranked he Mountain West Con- with a record of 14-4. gars are fifth with a 6- l. es and the Cougars bat- t earlier this season in a eader where Utah won es, 3-1 and 7-5.

ougars' goal this season has been to continually improve, reaching their peak at conference tournament time.

That goal began to come into sight as the Cougars beat New Mexico -- ranked second in the MWC -- in a doubleheader last Saturday.

"We're where we need to be. We must continue to refuse to lose," said Coach Mary Kay Amicone.

Pitcher Maryon Dewitt said, "We've got to put it all together again."

The Cougars and Utes will start the first game of the doubleheader Saturday at 12:00 p.m. at Utah's home field.

Cougars to host meet Saturday

By Adrianne Nash and Ashley M. Graff
adrianne@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

For BYU track and field, Saturday's Tri-Meet marks the final home event before the Mountain Western Conference Outdoor Championships.

The Cougars will host Utah State and the University of Washington, creating an afternoon of intense competition.

According to the U.S. Track Coaches Association, the BYU women's team enjoys a No. 5 power ranking while Washington is No. 20.

Going into the meet, the Cougars hope to improve some of their individual rankings.

"This weekend, I'm planning on really focusing in on technique," said Amy Curtis, who placed second in the javelin last week at the Drake Relays.

Poole said it's getting down to the time when they're trying to put it all together.

"I'm not a predictor", Poole said. "But I will say our girls are ready to do as well or better than they have done all season."

For many of the BYU men, it will be another opportunity to qualify for the NCAA tournament, now less than a month away in Durham, N.C.

BYU men's track head coach Willard Hirschi feels that this meet will be one of the team's most competitive this year.

"Right now, we've got to focus on the competition," Hirschi said. "It's always a preparation contest. Washington has better performances in many events than we do."

One such athlete is Washington sprinter Ja'Warren Hooker, whom Hirschi called one of the best sprinters in the nation.

Hooker, an automatic qualifier for the NCAA tournament, will be competing in the 100- and 200-meter events, opposite BYU All-American athletes Kenneth Andam and Thobias Akwenye.

Akwenye, a junior from Namibia, agrees the sprints will be some of the most competitive events.

"We've got ... kids who can really run fast on the team," Akwenye said, "So there will be a lot of competition."

Akwenye is also running the starting leg for BYU's 4x100-meter relay team, a quartet Hirschi expects to qualify for the NCAA tournament.

The competition is scheduled Saturday from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Admission is free.

NCAA hopefuls go to Stanford

By Ashley M. Graff
graff@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

BYU sends some of its best long distance runners to California for the Cardinal Invitational held at Stanford this Friday.

"We have athletes who are right on the bubble of qualifying for NCAA spots. We wouldn't be sending them if we didn't think they would qualify," said women's head coach Craig Poole.

Both the men's and women's coaches are concerned with helping their runners achieve NCAA qualification times.

Poole and men's head coach Willard Hirschi agree that although the NCAA makes standard adjustments for altitude conditions, those adjustments are not sufficient.

"They would not qualify if they stayed here, because of the altitude," Hirschi said. "We have taken some of the best athletes and sent them to Stanford."

California's lower altitude will be a main factor in helping BYU runners to have better times.

Another factor in aiding the Cougars to better performance is better competition.

Officer sues SLC over firing

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A Salt Lake police officer, who was fired after being accused of using excessive force, is suing the city for more than $75,000 in legal fees.

According to a lawsuit filed Monday in 3rd District Court, Robert Joseph spent $50,144.35 on expert witnesses and agreed to pay attorney Loni DeLand $25,000 plus $1,402.65 in costs for defending him against criminal charges.

Joseph was charged with aggravated assault for firing 11 times at Wesley Scott, who Joseph said tried to run him over at a traffic stop. The charges were later dropped.

Joseph, who had worked for the department for two years, was fired but reinstated in January after prosecutors dropped the case. He was fired again after being found psychologically unfit for service. He is appealing that decision.

Joseph and DeLand argue the money is recoverable under Utah law because the alleged offense occurred while Joseph was performing police duties and because the case was dismissed.

Orem to seek support for recycling program

By Melinda Fitzgerald
fitzgerald@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Orem is hoping that raising public awareness will save its beleaguered recycling program.

"If 2,500 people sign up for the service, we will continue the program," said Jim Jones of Waste Management Inc.

Waste Management notified the city a few weeks ago that the program was going to be cut because of lack of support.

"There are 16,000 homes in Orem, but less than 600 people were participating, so we were losing about $4,000 per month," Jones said.

Orem is confident that by improving awareness it will be able to get the 2,500 participants required to keep the service.

"Orem is the only community in Utah to sponsor a recycling program. We feel that it is our responsibility to the environment to keep this program," Orem Mayor Jerry Washburn said.

By increasing public knowledge of the program, Washburn said he hopes to "bring information to people who want to recycle, but don't know what to do."

He will send a personal letter to Orem residents informing them about the recycling program.

If the city gets the needed participation, the program will continue, but with some improvements.

"It will still be voluntary and still be $3 per month," Jones said, "but we will have a new, automated can and will pick up more things."

Program users complained that the open recycling containers allowed papers to blow into the road, Washburn said.

Residents will be given new cans with a lid and that are similar to the trashcans they currently use.

"They can push out this new can with their regular can on garbage day," Jones said.

The cans will be picked up about every other week with residents' regular trash collection.

Newspapers, magazines, cardboard, tin, aluminum and small appliances can be put in the new cans. The products will be sorted and recycled at the plant.

"We have figured that more than half of what is currently being thrown away can be recycled," Washburn said.

Fluoride foes speak out

By Meg Thunell
meg@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Teeth were gritted and bared during Lindon's City Council meeting Tuesday as residents came together to discuss the pros and cons of fluoridating water.

What was supposed to be a 15-minute presentation by Clinton Miller, chair of the National Committee against Fluoridation, turned into a lengthy debate by residents.

"If the people want fluoride, they can take a fluoride pill," said Dr. Gary Smith of Pleasant Grove. "But I don't think they can put fluoride in my water and force me to drink a poisonous substance."

Most of the people present were vocal in their opposition to fluoridation.

"We feel it is an inappropriate use of a public water system to deliver medicine," said Raye Howard of Highland, president of the grass roots lobbying organization Health Forum.

The debate over water fluoridation has been raging in Utah County since March 2000, when the Utah State Legislature passed a bill allowing county commissioners in Utah, Weber and Davis counties to put the fluoridation issue to the voters for a decision.

Opponents of water fluoridation say they are worried about dangers involved in fluoridation, claiming it is difficult to regulate the dosage of fluoride once it is put in the water. If water is fluoridated, opponents say they fear children and the elderly may ingest too much fluoride, causing fluorosis and other complications.

both sides

- Fluoride may be linked to cancer, kidney disease, and hip fractures in the elderly
- Regulating dosages for different people is impossible
- Fluoride decreases dental decay and cavities
- Fluoride strengthens teeth

sources: American Medical Association
American Dental Association

According to the American Dental Association, generally accepted scientific knowledge agrees that these claims are invalid.

Like all chemicals, fluoride can be dangerous if it is consumed in large quantities. The ADA holds, however, that the amount of fluoride present in fluoridated water is not enough to cause problems.

The ADA also said studies show that in areas where water is fluoridated, such as the East Coast, dental decay is significantly decreased.

Arrests imminent in Puerto Ric

Associated Press

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico — With opposition growing in the United States – including from Hillary Rodham Clinton – federal agents faced the prospect Wednesday of arresting bishops and a congressman who have joined protesters occupying a Navy bombing range.

Rep. Luis Gutierrez arrived Wednesday on the Puerto Rican island of Vieques, where he planned to remain and face arrest with dozens of others intent on making the Navy end its bombing exercises. A federal raid to clear the range has been expected for days.

"In the final count, we are going to win peace for Vieques," the Illinois Democrat told demonstrators in the bomb-littered range at dawn on Wednesday. Groups of Roman Catholic bishops and priests have also joined the fray.

A statement from the first lady said she opposed the Navy's bombing exercises on Vieques.

GOP to convene, Hatch faces three rivals

Sen. Orrin Hatch is seeking to become the longest-serving popularly elected senator in Utah history. The 66-year-old chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee is facing re-election for a fifth six-year term in the U.S. Senate.

On Saturday, he will face opposition from three other Republican candidates at the Utah GOP Convention in Salt Lake City.

Republicans Frank Guliuzza, a college professor, Greg Hawkins, an attorney, and Bart Thomas, a retired real estate investor, are also vying for the position.

Sen. Orrin Hatch

If one of these candidates receives 60 percent of the delegate votes at the convention, the Republican nomination will be his, eliminating all other Republican Party challengers.

On the Democratic side, Scott Howell, minority leader in the Utah State Senate, is the sole contender for the senate office.

Carlton Bowen, an Independent, and Jim Dexter, Libertarian, are also candidates.

At last week's convention for Utah County Republicans, Hatch was criticized by two of his primary opponents.

Guliuzza criticized Hatch's length of tenure, drawing attention to the amount of legislation Hatch has passed while in office.

"He's been there four terms – a quarter of a century," Guliuzza said. "He is racking up l[illegible] tion like Karl Malone is r[illegible] up points."

Gore's promise of tighter prison drug laws not to affect state prisc

Utah State Prison has strict drug policy already

By Amy Smith
smith@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Democratic presidential candidate Al Gore proposed tighter drug laws for prison inmates, parolees and probationers on Tuesday.

While campaigning before hundreds of law officers, community leaders and children at an Atlanta YMCA, Gore said inmates need to be cleansed from substance abuse when they are released from prison.

"I believe we should demand that criminals get clean to get out of jail," Gore said. "We know that breaking the cycle of drug addiction is essential to fighting crime."

Gore's proposals will have no affect on the Utah State Prison in Murray off I-15, said Jack Ford, spokesman for the Utah Department of Correction.

"The federal government has no jurisdiction over state correctional institutions," Ford said.

Drug problems are inevitable at every prison and the Utah State Prison has strict policies to help control substance abuse problems among its inmates, parolees and probationers, he said.

"We have a zero tolerance policy on drugs," Ford said.

Each month prison officials run drug tests on about 2,000 inmates based on a computer-generated random selection of prisoners, he said. The computer system makes sure all prisoners are checked on a regular basis.

Prisoners with a record of "dirty urine" are tested for substance abuse more frequently, Ford said.

If drug tests come back positive, guilty inmates could lose their parole date, visitor privileges, jobs and outside recess time, he said.

"Depending on if it's a first or second offense, (the inmate) could get maximum security," Ford said.

Drugs are smuggled into the prisons in numerous ways, he said.

"Most drugs come in through visitors," Ford said.

However, Ford said the state prison in Murray has experienced almost everything from inmates receiving a bag of drugs from a passing car while wo[illegible] on a construction job outside prison[illegible] to friends throwing tennis balls fi[illegible] drugs into the prison courtyards.

Other prisoners let their fruit ferm[illegible] make their own alcohol. Ford said[illegible] hol consumption is also considered[illegible] substance abuse.

Utah has 16,000 parolees and probat[illegible] ers who are also tested for subs[illegible] abuse, Ford said.

If test results are positive, the [illegible] party often has the choice of either[illegible] ing for drug rehabilitation treatme[illegible] returning to prison.

Abraham worked his way up ladder

By CARLA DNAN BASS
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — It's a grandmotherly adage: You've got to do what you can with what you've got.

But that's how Jay Abraham built his career as a sales and marketing consultant.

He doesn't have a formal education, was married at age 18 and had two kids by 20. And when he landed an all-commission sales job, Abraham said he realized that he was going to have to take full advantage of his few advantages.

"If you only eat if you deliver you become ruthlessly focused on how to maximize your time," said Abraham, who's based in California.

He is now a leading marketing consultant and speaker, commanding a $25,000 fee for a three-day conference. And he recently wrote a book about how he did it: "Getting Everything You Can Out of All You've Got: 21 Ways You Can Out-Think, Out-Perform, and Out-Earn the Competition.

"If you only eat if you deliver you become ruthlessly focused on how to maximize your time."

— Jay Abraham

Abraham said his advice can be applied to anything from running a business to starting a sales career.

"The way to succeed in your career is the same thing. It's all very transferable," he said recently in a talk to the Dallas chapter of Sales and Marketing Executives International.

He bases his ideas on three cornerstone concepts:

Maximize what is already being done.

For sales workers, that means first looking at how they landed their best customers. If most of them come from referrals, Abraham said, the sales worker should try to get more; if most come from cold calls, concentrate on making more.

Sales workers also should study and analyze how many contacts they usually make to land a sale. Finding leads, establishing new customers and maintaining existing accounts sometimes take three different skill sets, he said.

"It's rare that some person is good at all of those," he said, so sales workers must focus on what they do best.

Differentiate yourself from competitors.

One way to do that is to look at other industries for ideas, Abraham said, because the best innovations "won't be discovered in your industry or field."

An example of such out-of-the-box thinking is Federal Express.

The overnight delivery service might never have worked if it hadn't borrowed the banking industries' method of clearing checks overnight, Abraham said.

"What is as common as dirt in one industry can have the impact of an atomic bomb in another industry," he said.

Systematically use the power of relationships.

Referrals, he said, are better than cold calls because they generally buy more goods, buy more often, cost almost nothing to acquire and, in turn, refer more clients.

Developing relationships also means spending "quality time" with them, Abraham said.

"A client is literally someone who is under the care and protection of another. Fall in love not with your company, but with your client." he said. "After that you won't let anyone buy less, more, or lower quality than they should."

Many planners stay independent

By VIKAS BAJAJ
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Peggy Everson didn't have to think long about rejecting American Express' recent job offer.

Her 10-year-old financial planning practice as an independent contractor with American Express Financial Advisors is thriving, and she is taking home most of her profits. So when the Minneapolis-based firm recently asked whether she wanted to be a franchisee or an employee, Everson didn't hesitate.

"I have been independent too long," said Everson, 50. "I chose it (franchising) for the freedom, the ability to choose."

All financial planners have to address the question of how they want to structure their practices at least once in their careers. Many change their minds several times.

The choices include:

—Working for a national planning firm.

—Affiliating with a planning firm as a franchisee or contractor.

—Starting an independent financial practice.

—Working for a regional or local planning partnership.

American Express, which until recently treated most of its planners as independent contractors, now offers professionals three career paths: employment, franchising and affiliation.

Susan Gethin, an American Express spokeswoman, said the options give planners varying degrees of freedom and support.

Employees are paid a salary and can make more money by bringing in new clients. Franchises, such as Everson, use the American Express brand but own their own practice and can sell it when they retire. Affiliated professionals can't use the American Express brand name, but they get investment products and services from the company.

The new options are designed to get more financial planners to join or affiliate with American Express, Gethin said. The company wants to double its planner ranks to 20,000 by 2008.

"We feel in order to succeed in the future you have to have choice for advisers and choice for consumers," she said.

Experienced planners counsel young professionals to start as employees of an established firm. Companies such as Merrill Lynch, American Express and Axa Advisors offer experienced mentors and training programs that employees couldn't afford on their own.

Rehiring an important part of business

By CAROL KLEIMAN
Chicago Tribune

They say you can't go home again, but today's tight labor market means going back to work for a former employer is a real possibility: Rehiring is becoming an important business recruitment tool, but it's confined only to those who left in good graces and were excellent employees the first time around.

"We're getting the good eggs back, and these people bring a fresh energy and new ideas," said Julie Biber, Chicago-based recruitment manager for Edelman Public Relations Worldwide, which has annual revenues of $167 million and 1,700 employees in 38 offices. "They know their way around, are quick studies and provide better client services."

Last November, Edelman instituted a company-wide Welcome Back Club as a human resource initiative. So far, 12 people have been re-recruited by staff recommendations, word of mouth, networking and keeping in touch with past employees. The jobs range from senior account supervisors to senior vice presidents.

> "I found a 'welcome back' sign on my desk and I brought bagels for everyone."
> — Patti Morrison

"Employers are finding there's a need to be creative (in recruitment)," said Biber, who has a bachelor's degree in marketing and public relations and has been a human resources professional since 1991.

I asked Biber about loyalty: Many employers consider anyone who quits a traitor. Why would they want a potential malcontent back on staff?

"Leaving is not disloyal," said Biber emphatically. "Many people leave for better pay, family reasons or to acquire more skills. And there's a good chance they'll stay longer. They know why they left the first time and this time make a conscious decision to make it work."

In January, five of her former managers recommended Patti Morrison, an Edelman account supervisor from 1993 to 1994, as a potential re-recruit. In February, Morrison returned to her former agency as senior vice president.

"I found a 'welcome back' sign on my desk and I brought bagels for everyone," said Morrison, who has a bachelor's degree in communications and 13 years experience in public relations. "I left Edelman for a great opportunity to stretch my wings at a smaller agency. I was there for five years and quit to do volunteer work for one year. I was unemployed and considering my options when Edelman called."

Morrison says she was "excited about coming back, had kept in touch with my colleagues — and I knew they wanted me. It was a warm, comforting feeling."

"As long as the job candidate left honorably, returning is a good deal for both employee and employer," said H. Douglas Christiansen, president and CEO of CPS Inc., a recruitment firm based in Westchester. CPS has 100 recruiters on staff and specializes in middle managers with a salary range of from $60,000 to $130,000 annually. "To be able to hire a known quantity is a good business decision."

Christiansen, who has a bachelor's degree in marketing and psychology and opened his firm in 1973, points out that an important aspect of re-hiring, which he occasionally has done, is "to grease the way for the returning employee by letting co-workers know in advance why and how it happened."

He adds: "Good managers are always anxious to hire back a good former employee."
